Authentic Brotherhood | Kingdom Entrepreneurship

Overview: We are invited to see our daily responsibilities not as distractions from faith, but as places where faith is actively lived out. Rooted in Colossians 3:23–24, this lesson explores how our work—whether paid or unpaid, visible or unnoticed—becomes an act of worship when offered to God with integrity, excellence, and devotion. Worship is not confined to church settings; it extends into the ordinary rhythms of work, responsibility, and service where God meets us and forms us.

Verse: Let them all praise the name of the Lord, for only his name is exalted. His splendor rises above the earth and the heavens!". Psalm 148:13 TPT

Presentation Overview:

- Work is not separate from faith—it is one of the primary ways we serve and worship the Lord daily.
- God invites us to bring our heart and soul into every activity, not just spiritual ones.
- When we work for the Lord rather than for approval or reward, our perspective and motivation change.
- Even ordinary work carries eternal significance as we faithfully steward what God has entrusted to us.

Questions for Work as Worship

- What stands out to you in Colossians 3:23–24? What words or phrases caught your attention? What felt encouraging, challenging, or different from normal work think?
- How does this passage expand your understanding of work and worship? Paul doesn't separate spiritual activities from everyday responsibilities. How does this challenge the way you typically divide faith and work?
- What are you learning about who God is from His view of work? What do we learn about God's character from the idea that He sees our work, receives our service, and promises an inheritance? How does focusing on who we work for change how we approach responsibility and pressure?
- Where do you see "work as worship" already happening in your life? In your job, side hustles, volunteering, family duties, or daily routines, where might you already be serving the Lord without calling it worship? Where might God be inviting greater intention?
- What tends to shrink or distort work-as-worship for you? Fatigue, frustration, lack of recognition, stress, comparison, routine, or feeling stuck? How does this passage help re-center your perspective when work feels draining or meaningless?
- What is one small, intentional way you could live this passage out this week? Not a major career change—just one posture, habit, or choice. How might putting your "heart and soul" into one activity, done for the Lord, change the way you experience your?

Closing Prayer:

Father, thank You for meeting us in the ordinary places of our lives. Help us bring our heart and soul into our work as an offering to You. When work feels heavy or unnoticed, remind us that You see and receive our faithfulness. As we step into the week ahead, may the way we work honor You and reflect Your character. Amen.
